

I THINK globalization is helpful in some ways and harmful in others. It's definitely good because it allows more people to approach different cultures. But at the same time imposing a stronger culture, like the WESTERN one on less developed countries may hinder their own culture.

But it is also true that the New World has always been considered a land of opportunity (Just like the proponents of multiculturalism think, who have suggested alternative metaphors to describe the current American society, such as a mosaic or kaleidoscope).

When we lose the right to be different, we lose the privilege to be free.

Quando perdiamo il diritto di essere diversi, perdiamo il privilegio di essere liberi.

← The great American melting pot according to some conservatives

